Re: Multi-Format, Inc.

Dear Chuck:

Based upon information this office has received from the industry concerning both prior art to United States Patent No. RE 38,079 (the '079 reissue patent) and the methods by which DVDs are manufactured and played, Multi-Format has decided to voluntarily dismiss the action entitled Multi-Format, Inc. v. Amazon.com, Inc.; Best Buy, Inc.; Buy.com, Inc.; Circuit City Stores, Inc.; Costco, Inc.; Fry's Electronics, Inc.; K-Mart, Inc.; Radio Shack Corp.; Sears, Roebuck & Co.; Target Corp.; and Wal-Mart Stores, Case No. 03-5660 LGB (USDC, C.D. Cal). A conformed copy of Multi-Format's dismissal is enclosed.

Multi-Format's patent portfolio includes many United States and foreign patents directed to 24 fps video cameras, multi-format videotape recorders and video servers, video editing devices using a 24 fps production format, dual format media asset management devices, and other technologies related to digital video recording, image manipulation, transmission and display.

Although Multi-Format and its undersigned counsel have concluded that substantial questions of infringement exist concerning the application of certain claims in the '079 reissue patent to certain DVD replicating and DVD playing apparatus and methods, Multi-Format has pending an additional continuation application which could result in the issuance of claims which cover such DVD apparatus and methods. Additionally, we have concluded that substantial infringing activity of Multi-Format's patents is currently ongoing by companies to whom the retailers looked for indemnification in the above-mentioned lawsuit in connection with the use, manufacture, sale and offer for sale of products and processes unrelated to the DVD industry.
